The Outlook as to Silver.

From the New York World.

It is certain that the house will pass some form of free-coinage bill this year by an overwhelming majority. It is scarcely less certain that the WINE OF CARDUI, a Tonic for Women senate will also pass the bill by a strong majority. The record shows the upper house to be not less certainly though somewhat less overwhelming in favor of free coinage than find the world full of teachers. the present lower house.

A year ago last June the direct is sue of absolute free coinage was raised in the senate by Mr. Plumb's amendment to the Sherman purchase bill, and the senate voted for free union at Osborne, Kansas. coinage by 43 to 24, with 17 absentees, of whom 9 were pretty certainly free-coinage men. So far as can be determined, the changes made since that time in the personnel of the senate have not materially altered the attitude of that body on the subject. and he put them in jail. If they have made any change it is in the direction of free silver rather than the other way.

It is practically certain, therefore, that the bill contemplated by Mr. Bland, providing free coinage for all American silver hereafter to be produced, will pass both houses this session. What will the president do with it?

Mr. Harrison is committed against the measure by all his utterances on the subject, but presidents are always consistent in the face of adverse least conceivable that political conditions may so shape themselves this year as to induce him to find excuse for not opposing his veto to a measure passed by both houses.

The probabilities seem strongly the other way, however. Mr. Harrison is pretty sure to veto a free-coinage measure. Upon that is the chief reliance of those who regard free coinage is 2,400,000. as a menace to financial stability. But is it a secure reliance? Is it certain that such a free-coinage bill as is expected to be passed could not become law in spite of the veto?

The majority in the house is pretty sure to be large enough to overcome ingly rare on the Pacific coast. A disapproval. Is it certain that a like majority cannot be secured by the silver men in the senate?

The vote in 1890 was not quite a two-thirds vote, but it was sufficiently near it to encourage speculation it is claimed, a five-gallon demijohn as to present chances. That vote of whisky found in his stomach. was for the free coinage of all silver; this year the proposition will probasilver already mined. It seems not inconceivable that the more guarded proposition may find favor with some who opposed Mr. Plumb's amendment. The whole question may possibly turn upon the number

Again, the existing law has features that many anti-silver men have come to regard as worse than the evils of free coinage. May it not be possible population of China numbered, in that this opinion will be reflected in the senate, and that some who voted increased in 1888 to 303,241,969, against Mr. Plumb's amendment will giving an increase of more than 1,vote for a modified free coinage meas- 000,000 souls in a year. ure as on the whole preferable?

It seems not impossible at any rate that the free-coinage vote in the senate may be swelled into a two-thirds majority this year, though a careful canvass of the names, in the light of former votes and expressions, does not render that result quite probable. And even should there be a twothirds vote in favor of the bill on its original passage, is it quite certain policeman came up and arrested the for the overriding of a veto? Such a times, the dog skulked off. vote would of necessity include many Republicans. Would not some of them hestitate to favor the passage of a bill in opposition to the formal disapproval of a president of their own party faith? This is a question she entertains her numerous dolls. very difficult to answer. The silver question is not one on which party lines are drawn, and the opinions of senators concerning it are determin- for sale by the following merchants in ed by other than party considerations.
